The Journal of Neuropsychology is a new international peer-reviewed journal published by The British Psychological Society. Due to be launched in March 2007, it will publish original contributions to scientific and clinical knowledge in the field of neuropsychology.

Call for Papers

Topics reflect the multidisciplinary character of the field and include clinical and research studies with neurological, psychiatric and psychological patient populations in all age groups using a variety of research methods ranging from test construction and normative data, behavioural or pharmacological treatment regimes, to cognitive experimentation and neuroimaging. Its approach embraces neighbouring fields such as developmental psychology, neurology, psychiatry, physiology, endocrinology, pharmacology and imaging science.

The following will be considered for publication:

- Papers reporting original empirical investigations
- Group and case studies addressing fundamental issues concerning brain-behaviour relationships and the cognitive architecture of the brain.
- Theory-driven studies regarding the epidemiology of specific deficits, new assessment tools, normative data and the evaluation of treatment regimes.
- Review papers
- Brief reports and comments
